Scottish Sports and Melodies Afford a Day of Rare Enjoyment to Hundreds.

Official List of Winners in the Interesting Series of Games and the Prizes

Thursday was a gala day at Lake Wilder, the mountains and glens there resounding with the sound of the Scottish bagpipes and pibroches, the occasion being the picnic and games of the Caledonian clubs of Helena, Butte, Great Falls, Deer Lodge, etc. The day opened bright and fair and everything was in readiness when the train with the Helena contingent, numbering over 100, arrived on the scene. The Butte train next drew up at this picturesque station with its crowd of ardent Scotchmen and their friends. The members of this club, numbering ninety, were dressed with their bonnets, brooches and The men made a fine appearance and alto-The men made a fine appearance and altogether put their Helena brethren in the shade, the latter dispensing with any emblem of their national garb. The scene was a brilliant and magnificent one, the whole surroundings tending to remind the Caledonians forcibly of their own native land. When the party, numbering in all some 500 or so, had greeted their friends, the sports of the day were entered into with great zest, whilst those not so interested in the games induiged in dancing to music supplied by a string band from Butte. A CLUMSEY THIEF.

Caught by a Clever Detective. A queer case came to light yesterday which shows that the guilty are not always punished, and that criminals are sometimes allowed to go unhanged. About six weeks ago a carpenter who was working on the Broadwater buildings at the Hot Springs Broadwater buildings at the Hot Springs and was living in the city, awoke one morning and found that his purse containing $380 was missing. He suspected his roommate of having made away with the money, but hadn't the slightest evidence against him. He told City Detective walters about his loss and engaged him to Walters about his loss and engaged him to | lut ferret out the matter.

Mr. Walters immediately set a watch apon the suspected man, who is also a carpenter and who worked every day at his trade. The man conducted himself so his trade. The man conducted himself so well that the detectives began to despair of ever getting anything against him. He was watched, however, and never made a move that was not reported to Mr. Walters. Last Saturday night the two spotters Mr. Walters had employed grew weary of their job and asked to be relieved. Mr. Walters prevailed upon them to wait a day. He had discovered that the man had a girl. Knowing that the fellow would go to see Knowing that the fellow would go to see his lady love on Sunday, and thinking that he would dress in his best the detective conceived the happy idea of watching him change his clothes. He secured a room opposite the suspect and awaited develop-ments. The man came in about II o'clock, disrobed and took a bath. He then laid out his Sunday-go to meeting clothes and transferred his effects from his pockets to dressed with their two pipers at their plaids, and with their two pipers at their the suit he proposed to wear on the morrow while he wooded the girl of his choice. From the breast pocket of his coat he took something which the watchers could not recognize, and going to the dressing case turned it around and with a pen knife took the back from the mirror and deposited his treasure. He then dressed himself and went down stairs. No sooner had he left than Mr. Walters went into his room and investigated. He found behind the mirror a bank book with a credit of $235 to John Carroll. The book was placed where it was found and the detective went back Shortly the man came back to his room and disrobed. The man who lost the money was in the boarding house and the detective went down stairs, secured him and the proprietor of the hotel and went to the room of the supposed thief and demanded admittance. The man let them in and a severe examination began. Find-ing that he was cornered he admitted the theft of his room mate's money and turned over the bank book good for the money which he had deposited under a fictitious name. He also turned over a certificate of deposit for $50 in his own name and $35 in cash, and was allowed to go to bed. The next morning after the man who had been that there must be more market, better prices to the "poor prospectors, owners of smail prospects, etc.," in consequence of this rise in value, created by the promised ruling of Mr. Secretary Windom.

How much better figure are these men paying the "poor prospectors" for the raw lead ore in consequence of the rise in value in the market for lead bullion or manufactured lead?

shipped in the winter months as is absolutely necessary to keep the prospectors going. I believe that this is the cause for the fact that when lead ores are not being reduced or marketed their is less demand for them by those who co sume their product, because they purchase lead for their manufacturing purposes, whatever, that may be, when lead miners are mining and reducing it the cheapest, i. e. during the dry months. Figures bear out this suggestion, because for several years past lead has been the highest in the fall of the year, when the purchasers are active (obtaining winter supplies) and the brokers and warehousemen have plenty on hand to sell and speculate in.

Last year when, as the complaint goes, so much of that mysterious, awful Mexican lead was coming in, the average for lead in the New York metal exchange for the fall months was $4.71½ per cwt. Since May, the time of the lead agitation and since when that importation is said to have been stopped, the average price has been $3.70%.

Now this difference of I cent per pound goes to the reduction works and broker who buy the ores and affects their profit goes to the reduction works and broker who buy the ores and affects their profit alone. Never to my knowledge have pur-chasers of ore from the "poor prospectors" ever raised the unital value of lead in ore because the market for bullion was raised.

New York, Sept. 13.—F. W. Gesswein, a millionaire tool manufacturer, was murdered this morning by Christian Deihl. Deihl claimed that Gesswein had defranded him in a patent transaction. He entered Gesswein's effice this morning and demanded $500. Gesswein refused and Dethl shot him through the heart. Deihl is 60 years old. He was arrested. Deihl has been accustomed to call upon Gesswein frequently at his store on John street, but after his defeat in the courts he discontinued his visits. Nothing had been seed of him for the past six months until this morning, when Deihl walked into Gesswein's store and inquired for the proprietor. He was shown into Gesswein's private office on the second floor. They were alone with the door closed and no one knows exactly what occurred. Charles Koester, one of the clerks, had a desk right next to the thin board partition which separates Gesswein's office from the remainder of the room. He heard Deihl demand money from Gesswein, and when the latter refused there was a loud report. Koester rushed jinto the room. Gesswein lay dead on the floor. Deihl was standing in the middle of the floor with a smokting revolver in his hand. Koester seized him and at the same time spatched the revolver and called for help. Deihl was turned over to the officer and
